Exciting Events are happening in the month of October in IARc!

Phillips Collection Competition at CVA Gallery

Chair by D. E. Leckie, Light by Claudia Aguilera Guardado

The Department of Interior Architecture was well represented at the recent Phillips Collection Competition held at the Center for Visual Arts in downtown Greensboro. Current IARc graduate students, alumni, and faculty members were among the competitors in the juried competition which showcased innovative furniture and decorative arts from emerging designers around the U.S. Our alumni earned high honors: the winning design was awarded to IARc Graduate alumnus Adrian Boggs and the People’s Choice Award went to undergraduate alumnus Brian Peck. For more information and images of the competition, see the CVA Gallery

Loewenstein Legacy Modernism Tour and Symposium

Edward Loewenstein’s Residence with current owner and daughter, Jane Levy Earlier this month, the inaugural Loewenstein Legacy Modernism Tour and Symposium was held in Greensboro celebrating the work of Edward Lowenstein. The weekend long event included lectures by national and statewide experts on Modernism and tours of several modern homes in the Greensboro area. The influence of Loewenstein was also highlighted through the work of several ground breaking African-American architects who worked at Loewenstein-Atkinson. These men were all greatly influential in introducing modernist design in Greensboro and showcased our rich design heritage here in Greensboro. Ticket proceeds from the event went toward the Lowenstein Graduate Award at UNCG. For more information see Modernism

Revitalizing Glenwood

This summer IARc received a Community Based Research Award from UNCG for [2nd] year graduate student Catherine French, [3rd] year undergraduate student Joy Troyer, and Assistant Professor Travis Hicks to research preservation and sustainability in the historic Glenwood neighborhood across Lee Street and the site of UNCG’s new Spartan Village. The intent of their research which began with documentation of the historical context of the neighborhood is to create preservation guidelines for sustainable community development. – Cat, Joy, and Travis are using the LEED-ND (Neighborhood Development) standards to help develop their guidelines for integrating sustainability into Glenwood. The IARc group also has partnered with Preservation Greensboro to build lasting relationships between Glenwood, UNCG, and the community. For more information see iblog!

Fall Midterm Studio Review

[3rd] year studio model, [4th] year presentation at high school

[1st] year students led by Hannah Mendoza and Tommy Lambeth have been working with a song and translating it through diagrams, poetry, music videos, dance and sculptures using different sensory representations in an iterative design process.

[2nd] year students being led by Stephanie Brooker are designing and creating portable emergency shelters, which were entered into the Creative Time Summit held in the Gatewood Lobby. The [2nd] year students in Beth McGee’s studio are finishing up documentation and redesign of six historic Glenwood homes using universal design for modern home owners.

[3rd] year students have also been redesigning houses in the Glenwood neighborhood and are focusing on different types of commercial spaces with the aid of Stoel Burrowes and Doug Leckie.

[4th] year students, led by Dr. Laura Cole, recently presented their final designs for the science wing of Bartlett Yancey High School in Yanceyville, NC. Jo Leimenstoll is guiding her studio through an adaptive reuse of a historic building downtown.

Graduate Students are continuing their progress in studio projects that are aligned with their thesis topics that vary from adaptive reuse to product design.

Introducing the Greenhorns!

The Greenhorns is a young professional organization led by IARc alumni Karyn Judd Reilly and current [2nd] year graduate student Catherine French. The group focuses on sustainability, adaptability, and usability of historic structures in North Carolina. The Greenhorns organize social and educational events in Greensboro including the Heart Bomb of the Cascade Saloon in downtown. In this event, paper hearts were placed all over the building to help bring awareness to the endangered structure. The group also sponsored the Fountain House during the Loewenstein House Tours, where members of the group served as docents informing visitors of the renovation process. To receive more information or to join the group, please see their Facebook page
