Design Impacts Life

Randy W. Fiser leads the American Society of Interior Designers (ASID) as chief executive officer, overseeing the strategic planning, financial management, and national operations for the Society's more than 25,000 members who work across all sectors of residential and commercial interior design.

Since being named CEO in 2012, Fiser has led ASID in key collaborations to advance the interior design profession, including a commitment with the Clinton Global Initiative to develop protocols for health and wellness in design. He also fostered an alliance with leaders of the design and construction industry and building owners and operators to promote resilience in building materials, design, and construction.

Dedicated to advancing community and economic development, Fiser brings to his role a unique point of view about the capacity of design to make a positive impact on human health, well-being, and productivity. Prior to ASID, Fiser held leadership roles in strategic management, finance, operations, programs, and planning with Achieve Inc., Make It Right Foundation, the Fannie Mae Foundation, and Booz Allen Hamilton. Fiser received an MBA in International Business from Georgetown University, an M.Ed in Counseling and Human Development from the University of Georgia, and a B.S. in Business Administration – Human Resources from Northern Arizona University.
